(As of December 31, 2002 of General Dynamics Corp.)

Description: Bath Iron Works, which became a subsidiary of General Dynamics in 1995, constructs ships for the US Navy. BIW is the lead designer and builder for the Arleigh Burke Class AEGIS guided-missile destroyer, and it is designing the new DD- 21 land attack destroyer. The company also is part of the team developing the LPD-17 amphibious assault ship. BIW's Surface Ship Support Center (opened 2000) offers design and engineering, logistics, manpower management, fleet services, and other support services. BIW built its first ship for the US Navy, a gunboat called the USS Machias, in the 1890s. The company is the largest employer in the state of Maine.
